Pathos and humor are peculiarly combined, and put together so as to produce the happiest effects. A Carleus Old Mopraing Pin.

A descendant of Washington who bears his dilinations name, now living in New York, has a most gumous pin umong the old time reties in,ber treasure box. It is a "mourning pin." It was a custom in Washington's time/to leave a certain, sum of money to be greended for "mourning pins" for the feminine members of the deceased man's family. The sum was designated in the will.

man's family The sum was designated in the will.

The brocohes were of good size, awang on pivota in the surrounding frame of golf, so that the upper and lower side colid be wern in sight, according to the phood and wish of the wearer. The upper side contained a miniature of the deceased. Sometimes it was painted with great care and delicacy, but it was usually simply an ambrutype. The one referred to has the portrait of one of Washington's cousins, a fine-looking man, with a handsome headest off by a wig The reverse side of the brooch is truly suggestive of death and grief. It has the picture of two graves, beside me of which sits the widow weeping copiously, one ludges, from the grief stricken attitude she is placed in, under a weeping willow tree made of the dead, man's hair. The cheeries, deleval and hopeless look of the picture is somewhat relieved by the shoth of an angel in the clouds above the graves. The angel is cheerily blowing a trumpet, and above him is inscribed the consoling centiment. "Sorrow not without hope."

Give Semething That Four Friend Will Be Sure to Appreciate--Leving Thought in a Gift Surpasses in the Success the Value of the Present Itself. A certain gentlewoman has a singular faculty for giving the wrong things to her friends. She sincerely desires to please them, but she is dedicient in the sense of sultability. For example, to a little girl, a member of a most prosale family, she recently presented a copy of one of Lewis Carroll's books. They cannot get over it. All of them have read it, and none of them see any "point in it," as they say The little girl herself is simply dunfounded by it. No one should ever present to that

it. No one should ever present to that family anything beyond the "Lives of Fa-mous Men," or manuals of needlework. These they can comprehend, and they value

These they can comprehend, and they value them.

"But," you protest, 'do you not wish to enlighten them, and give them a taste of the pleasures of the imagination?"

"Well, it is difficult to combine didsettes and that sort of giving which we intend ahall convey pure and undiffured pleasure to the beneficiary invite the friend whom you wish to improve to read with you, to attend a lecture with you, but do not give her a present unless you are sure it is going to please her, not mystify and worry her once worken's mistake.

If a wro wants a peaceful atmosphere and the same unlamited adoration that the had from the individual who was her lover in her earlier days, one of her first endeavors must be to retaid it by in some measure deserving it. One of the first things for hear to attend to in that line is that of keping the homehold and other expenses enurely within the sum that she and her husband have decided to be fit and proper, and a system that will insure that having been established to let her husband's pocket rest in pence, to ask for no more money, and to have none of those triding tensing expenses of which such single amount is small, but the sum is comparatively enormous. ONE WORLN'S MISTAEE.

One rich woman is in the habit of presentup far half worn costumes to a poor but very respectable family, in which there are several daughters. It so happens that there is no member of this family who has the slightest talent with her needle. These gowns, therefore, which would be a mine of wealth to an ingenious woman, are simply depressing to them, for they do not know what to do with 'hem. They generally end by buying some cheap material and getting a dressmaker in to cut and baste it for them, thus evplving their "best clothes," while they adapt to every day uses the elegant garments given them by making a few clamity alterations in them.

Then they are cast said long before their ONE WOMAN'S MISTARE making a lew classify alterations in them. Then they are east said long before their real usefulness is just. How much better it would be if the donor [would fled some other family upon whom to bestow her fine frocks, and would give to the stupid girls, whom she really desires to belp, something better satisfat to their needs. with her servants, to let him know not? ing of it, and if she has no servants, to husband her strongth in other ways and to make the work easy for herself by a systematic procedure—a day for this du y, and another for that a place for every thing and everything in its place it would be a poor sort of husband that would not appreciate this effect, and theet it more than half way. That business attended to, a wise wife will try and keep up with her husband's tone of thought and with his reading and will bring forward subjects for conversation and discussion not altogether personal, omitting acandish and fashions, making herself so companiohable and agreeable to better smited to their needs!

"I never can thick of anything to give to Cousia Cynthia," and a lady not long ago "She has had quantities of pretty presents, but she puts them away out of sight, and as she never goes anywhere she cannot use jowelry or other ornaments. There doesn't seem to be anything that I can give here which will be of the slightest use to her "hut have doesn't enjoy using things" rejoined another sounds, who understood hims Cynthia perfectly. "She takes more pleasure in packing her treasures sway, and looking at them in a treak in the garret once or twice a year, then you and I do in the diamonds which we flash out in at a ball."

TROUGET IN GIVING A certain lady who a ways received a large number of elegant Christmas presents was asked one season what were the most acceptable grits that she had had that ercise of as much courtesy to her husband as she was wont to use toward him in the days when it pleased her to think she attracted him never moreover to let him see that in anything she feels herself better than he, conseious that there is an quality sweeter in a woman than humlity. Up adoubtedly the fact remains that in many ways also is better than he but it will not help him to have that fact thrust upon him, for we all wish to live up to our reputations, and if he thinks he is a faultless husband he will try to continue so.

And then as her husband is mortal, she is to remember that fact, and not be surprised and manifest her surprise at his ents was asked our season what were the most acceptable gifts that she had had that year

The secret of success in gift giving is not in the expending of large sums, but in loving thought upon each gift provided. Everything is usually shocessful in proportion to the such and of thought that has been put into it, whether it be a banquet, a custume, or book, or the making of a sample gift if you are cramped for money, do not think you need to! spend much for Christmas gifts. The thought shown in a loving Christmas letter, a simple verse, or a pen and tak sketch, may give as genuine pleasure as a present of peurla. Reflect well upon the peculiarities and needs of the friend who in you wish to please. Then choose your gift carefully. Finally, after it is chosen the delivered, do not refer to it again in the way of self congratulation upon your deviness.

This was in peculiarity of a certain old lad) who was not ungenerous. She had an invariable tablit of contemplating the gifts which she had presented with great and undisguised as infaction. There are only two women in America on whom the insights of Officer de l'Acad emie has been conferred, and Mrs. John Sherwood is one of them. OILPIN'S RAILROAD TEHENEL

Some of the Obetpetor in the Way of the All Bail Hente to Europe.

The project of sar-Governor Glipin, of Colorado, to build aline of railway through the wilde of Alaska to Cape Prince of Wales, to compact with the Rassian rill way eystem through Eiberia, thus link ing the old and the new worlds with a rail road, is a feasible one and the future will see it accomplished. But there is a giant obtacle in the way of one unbroken line connecting the two bemispheres, and take is Bebring straits. Mr Glipin's proposition is to bridge these straits, which is all well enough in theory, but quite a different thing in practice.

At considerable expanse the straits can undoubtedly be bridged, as an taland has about medway between the Asiana and American shores, the distance is not great and the waters shallow, the government tharts showing the greatest depth to be only thirty owo fathoms.

But could a bridge be built high enough a allow towering leebergs to pass under t, and with strongth to willustand the great ice floes that are yearly swept down brough the straits from the Arctic ocean? The current in sweeping through the shraws straits from one great sea into an other is very swift and strong, and great energy would be borne against the bridge, its piers and abutments with a force that peither steal stringers nor maken work would stand against.

Should the structure stand for a timp it must ultimately give way before the greates block, with the current of the Arctic ocean sweeping gainst it, that would foil low any obstruction to its passage. The lee flow is the only difficulty in the way of ordging Behring straits and it is one that is insurmounitable. A ship talway across the straits could run in the summer only, as the straits could run in the summer only, as the straits could run in the summer only, as the straits could run in the summer only, as the straits could run in the summer only, as the straits could run in the summer only, as the straits could run in the summer only is the same on of the year is by tunneli

Late scientific investigations have provon that these glaciers move—that, at the rate of from a fraction of an loch to a foot or two daily, they are slapping down to the sea and with a regularity that is remark able, burly from their froots acress of ice et a time into the waters. Rolles of Gen Grant.

Relies of Gen Grant.

The gold articles in the Grant collection would fill a peck measure, and every city seems to have given Grant a gold box can taining the paper in which the freedom of the town was presented to him. The box which he received at Ayr, Sectland is as big as a eight box, and is of solid gold. The city of Glasgow, tave him a still begger one, beautifully chased and the gold box which he received from the city of London is a wonder of artistic workmanship bearing the engrating of the capital on one side and the London Guidhall on the other. Then there is a wonderfully beautiful capar case of pure gold from the king of Siam, a model of the table on which Lees sitronder was signed of solid gold, and a solid gold invitation card as big as a postel eard and about four times as theck, which was sent to Grant in a solid side, which was sent to Grant in a solid side, which was sent to Grant in a solid side, which was sent to Grant in a solid side, which was the contain many fine pieces of chima and cut glass. The punch bowl is as big as a half bushel. Some of the plates were given by Lolayette to Mrs Washington and the museum has lately received from the family of Leens Washington an number of antegriph letters which have never leth published — Washington Cor Pittshung Dupatch

Platinum More Ininable Than Gel I Prices of I der tooth I are gone up but the rise was caused solely by the searcity of platinum of which metal the little puns

All the platinum of commerce comes from ituseian mines in the Ural monitains, and the single is burily sufficient for the demand at present. The consumption of platinum has greatly in creased since the electric hidring companies began its use. But you ever observe the tiny hardlike wire loop in each incan descent light.

That with is in idea of platinum, which is one of the very hardest of metals. The price of platinum has gone up to about $20 an ounce which is considerably higher than 22-carat gold. Thus it comes about that platinum is literally worth its weight in gold, and more too. This may now with propriety be classed among the precious metals. It is found in Oregon and several other parts of the United State, but not in commercial quantities—New York Stat.

What Becomes of Your Hair.

With so much hair periodically taken away from the heads of the commonity what becomes of it ail? The civilized man, leaving the barber shop and feeling the wind strike chill upon the back of his head, gives scarcely a scoond thought to the ultimate destination of the hair that once shielded him, except perhaps to have ayague idea that it may in time find its way to its appointed place in mortar and mattressa. Even this is mere supposition on his part, and so long as it does not go down the back of his noch it matters to him not the least where it does go No such carelessness will content the savage islander. He must know what becomes of every particle of the hair which his been removed, and to guard against any possible mischause takes change of the failing locks as the dilvered hamboo or sharpened chank's tooth removes them.

locks as the allvered ham hoo or sharpened chark's tooth removes them.

When he has made sure that he has in his hand all the hair that was shortly before upon his head, he first and pressing care is to properly dispose of it. To this end he builds a small fire in his house, puts into it the hair and with attafaction watches it curl up and fall to ashes. These ashes he mires with water and gotips down, and then only does he feel eafe. The reason for all this excess of precaution is that his mind, ever timorous of some blighting cuit, is firmly convinced that it any one could get possession of a lock of his heir, burn it and swallow the ashes, that person could draw all his strength away, and he would weaken and dis, just in proportion as the other waxed hearif Therefore he takes the tiose himself.—William Churchill in New Orleans Picayune.
